Dear Friends,

Last year ended with the sad passing of our friend, colleague and passionate river warrior, Glenn Switkes. Glenn died of lung cancer in São Paulo, Brazil, from where he had been spearheading our Latin America work for the past 15 years.

In April our campaigns director, Aviva Imhof, traveled to Brazil to consult with local partners on how we can continue Glenn’s work of stopping the hydro-electrocution of the Amazon. Together with Glenn’s widow Selma and son Gabe, Aviva joined indigenous people and local activists in a memorial ceremony that ended with the scattering of Glenn’s ashes in the Xingu, a major Amazon tributary.

“The ceremony was deeply moving,” Aviva told me on her return, “and I felt so honored to be there. It was striking just how much Glenn was loved and respected by local activists, and how much they valued his support for their efforts to protect the Amazon.”

Thankfully, the rest of 2009 brought much better news in the dam-fighting, river-protecting world.

In Mexico, communities that we’ve been supporting for many years had two important victories: the cancellation of Arcediano Dam near Guadalajara, and the postponement until at least 2018 of La Parota Dam near Acapulco. The La Parota communities will continue to push for the permanent cancellation of this particularly noxious project.

In other good news from Latin America, 2009 saw the cancellation or indefinite postponements of controversial dams in Colombia, Honduras, El Salvador and Guatemala.

Another campaign that we’ve long supported is that of Turkish and European NGOs against the Ilisu Dam in eastern Turkey. In 2009 several European governments finally announced they would not fund the dam. Unfortunately, Chinese funders may step into the breach and support a project that threatens to displace up to 70,000 people and drown Hasankeyf, a remarkable 10,000 year-old Kurdish city.

Pressure from International Rivers and our partners in Italy and Kenya stalled plans from the European Investment Bank, the African Development Bank and the World Bank to fund Africa’s most destructive dam, Gibe 3 in southwest Ethiopia. Again, there is a strong risk that China will step in and fund this monstrous project that threatens the livelihoods of up to half a million farmers, herders and fisherfolk living along the Omo River.

The Ilisu and Gibe 3 cases highlight the importance of our “China Global” campaign, which aims to persuade Chinese banks and companies to adopt social and environmental standards that would keep them out of human rights-abusing and river-destroying dams.

On the solutions front, we supported and helped to publicize major reports on the clean energy potentials of Mozambique and Chile. We worked with the NGO Justiça Ambiental to publish A Renewable Energy Plan for Mozambique. The report shows how a focus on clean energy can promote greater regional equity in the country’s development while also sparing the Zambezi from further harm by dams. The report’s findings made headlines across the region.

On the home front, we moved our headquarters to the David Brower Center, a new state-of-the-art green building and center for progressive non-profits in downtown Berkeley.

Once again, thank you so much for your support. Our work is only possible thanks to your commitment to free-flowing healthy rivers and human rights.

Sincerely,

Patrick McCully
Executive Director
Our Mission

International Rivers’ mission is to protect rivers and defend the rights of communities that depend on them. We oppose destructive dams and the development model they advance, and encourage better ways of meeting people’s needs for water, energy and protection from damaging floods. To achieve this mission, we collaborate with a global network of local communities, social movements, non-governmental organizations and other partners. Through research, education and advocacy, International Rivers works to halt destructive river infrastructure projects, address the legacies of existing projects, improve development policies and practices, and promote water and energy solutions for a just and sustainable world. The primary focus of our work is in the global South.

Our Vision

We seek a world in which rivers and the ecosystems they support are valued, and the importance of the links between healthy environments and healthy societies are understood. We envision a world where development projects neither degrade nature nor impoverish people, and where all people have a voice in decisions affecting their lives and livelihoods.
AMAZON RIVER
In the Amazon we ramped up our campaign to stop the Belo Monte Dam on the Xingu River. We helped organize an Experts’ Panel to analyze Belo Monte’s environmental studies. The Panel produced a 230-page report that identified serious problems with the project’s design and helped civil society and indigenous groups better understand the project’s impacts. The report contributed to a delay in the environmental licensing process. We supported the efforts of the Kayapo and other indigenous communities and worked with members of the Movimento Xingu Vivo para Sempre to support their campaign.

CHILEAN PATAGONIA
Our work with allies in Chile led to further delays in the proposal to dam two rivers in Chilean Patagonia. As of this writing, the project has still not been approved by the Chilean environmental agency and many outstanding questions remain. We also generated extensive media coverage in Chile and internationally, adding to increasing pressure on the project sponsors and the Chilean government.

CHINA
Sinohydro, a company owned by the Chinese government, has become the world’s most important dam builder in recent years. In 2009, the company invited International Rivers to begin the first ever dialogue between a Chinese state-owned enterprise and an advocacy organization. Sinohydro has meanwhile accepted our proposal to prepare an environmental policy, and has invited our input for it.

ETHIOPIA
In 2009, the Africa Program continued its aggressive campaign against Ethiopia’s Gibe 3 Dam. Our efforts have succeeded in delaying all critical project funding from international funders. We published a report on the downstream indigenous communities; a critique of the project’s Environmental Social Impact Assessment; and a fact sheet on the project. We supported and advised our Kenyan partners in their filing of a complaint to the African Development Bank about the impacts to Kenya’s Lake Turkana, and filed our own complaint related to the project’s impacts in Ethiopia. We helped build an international coalition of NGOs against the dam. Our concerns were covered by the BBC, the Los Angeles Times, and many other international media. We also prepared supporting documentation for an Ethiopian seeking asylum in the US after his life was threatened for speaking out against the Gibe 3 Dam.

GUATEMALA
In 2009, International Rivers campaigners visited several communities threatened by the construction of the Xalalá Dam and conducted workshops on the process of dam building, impacts, financing of projects, and strategies to delay and stop construction.
of destructive dams. The project would affect more than 14,000 indigenous people who would lose land, crops, and other resources to the reservoir and associated construction works.

To date, local opposition to the project has kept the construction companies at bay.

MEKONG RIVER
In March, we helped to launch the Save the Mekong coalition, comprised of 25 organizations in the Mekong region and internationally, working to keep the Mekong mainstream flowing freely. The Coalition met with Thailand’s Prime Minister Abhisit Vejjajiva and delivered a 23,110 signature petition to the region’s Prime Ministers, making plans to build eleven dams on the Mekong one of the region’s hottest controversies. International Rivers also continued to monitor the destructive Nam Theun 2 and Theun-Hinboun dams in Laos, resulting in improved compensation measures for affected communities.

MOZAMBIQUE
We worked with a renewable energy consultant and local partners to produce A Renewable Energy Plan for Mozambique, which lays out a plan for developing energy sources that would make the proposed Mphanda Nkuwa Dam obsolete. The plan would share the energy wealth more equitably, and diversify the national electricity grid to help the nation adapt to climate change (which is expected to significantly harm hydro by reducing stream flow). The plan received significant media coverage in Southern Africa.

SOUTH ASIA
A massive dam–building boom in the Himalayas puts some of Asia’s most important rivers at risk. We used our report, Mountains of Concrete, to raise awareness of the threats posed by large dams to the cultures, climate, ecosystems, and geography of the Himalayas. The report calls attention to the huge risks that dams pose for India, Pakistan, Bhutan, and Nepal. At the end of 2009, International Rivers opened a new office in India to support the region’s NGOs in addressing the risks of dam building in the region.
25 Years of Protecting Rivers and Rights

1985
First International Dams Newsletter published in San Francisco.

1986
Gathering in the Amazon of indigenous people, activists and international celebrities leads to canceling of plan to dam the Xingu River. World Bank denies loan for the dam.

1987
Movement of Dam-Affected People formed in Brazil. World Bank Executive Directors meet for the first time with people threatened by one of its dams, Pak Mun in Thailand.

1989
First issue of World Rivers Review is published. Publishers name themselves International Rivers Network (IRN) and are given office space by Earth Island Institute. IRN later becomes Earth Island Institute.

1990
IRN organizes international conference of dam activists from 26 countries. Attendees draw up the San Francisco Declaration, which sets out guidelines to be followed in deciding on dam projects.

1991
First issue of World Rivers Newsletter is published. Publishers name themselves International Rivers Network (IRN) and are given office space by Earth Island Institute. IRN later becomes Earth Island Institute.

1992
World Bank withdraws from Sardar Sarovar Dam in India after independent review confirms serious problems. Big dams become IRN nightmare for World Bank. Their lending for dams plummets through the 1990s.

1993
Calling the project “outdated and overly expensive,” US Bureau of Reclamation stops providing technical support for the Three Gorges Dam.

1994
On the 50th anniversary of the World Bank, NGOs issue the Mandal Declaration, calling for a moratorium on World Bank funding for large dams around the world. Coordinated by IRN, the declaration is signed by 326 groups from 44 countries.

1995
World Bank cancels Anu Ill Dam in Nepal, saying the project was too risky and that alternatives existed. A proposed series of dams on the mainstream of the Mekong River is scrapped due to opposition.

1996
IRN goes online at www.irn.org.

1997
IRN first sets up overseas office, in Brazil. IRN helps organize the First International Meeting of Dam-Affected people and their Allies held in Cuiabá, Brazil.

1998
First International Day of Action against Dams and for Rivers, Water and Life.

1999
The villagers occupy Pak Mun dam site for 14 months to demand compensation for lost fisheries.

2000
Nelson Mandela launches the report of the World Commission on Dams. Commission’s findings vindicate dam activists’ positions. The World Bank starts campaign to discredit the report.

2001
IRN helps organize the First International Meeting of Dam-Affected people and their Allies held in Cuiabá, Brazil. World Bank and World Conservation Union agree to sponsor World Commission on Dams in response to opposition from IRN and others.

2002
IRN first sets up overseas office, in Brazil.

2003
IRN sponsors Second International Meeting of Dam-Affected People and their Allies. The meeting brings 300+ people from 62 countries to Rasi Salai, Thailand.

2004
After negotiations supported by IRN, Guatemalan government agrees to reparations talks with communities harmed by Chixoy Dam.

2005
IRN Bangkok office established.

2006
Hydrological analysis commissioned by IRN pushes regional governments to recognize that excess releases from dams are a major reason for the rapid shrinking of Africa’s Lake Victoria. IRN Bangkok office established.

2007
International Rivers Network changes its name to International Rivers and launches its new website internationalrivers.org.

2008
International Rivers research on Kyoto Protocol carbon offsets helps push UN to tighten project approval criteria.

2009
La Parola and Arrosciano dams in Mexico, Trasvase Dam in Australia, Uma 1 Dam in Colombia, and Pakua Ill Dam in Honduras are all cancelled or postponed. Chinese version of World Rivers Review launched. Save the Mekong Coalition formed.

2010
International Rivers India office established. International Rivers celebrates its quarter century.

2011
IRN goes online at www.irn.org. World Rivers Review is published. Publishers name themselves International Rivers Network (IRN) and are given office space by Earth Island Institute. IRN later becomes Earth Island Institute.

2012
International Rivers Network changes its name to International Rivers and launches its new website internationalrivers.org.

2013

* Indicates a River Healer (monthly sustainer)
International Rivers mourns the loss of our Amazon program director Glenn Switkes, a dear friend, respected colleague, and a river warrior of unbreakable passion. Glenn died on December 21, 2009 in a São Paolo hospital of complications linked to lung cancer. He was 58.

Glenn was a man of rare integrity, great humor, and political savvy. He was a much-loved inspiration and teacher to river defenders, and an effective thorn in the side of river-wrecking politicians and bureaucrats. Heartfelt tributes to Glenn have flowed in to International Rivers from activists throughout Brazil, Latin America and the world.

We will honor and celebrate his life with a renewed fighting spirit for the rivers of the Amazon and elsewhere…

(Glenn’s full obituary can be read online at www.internationalrivers.org/node/4945.)
